

Healthy Spaces

We know that children are more vulnerable than adults to environmental hazards, such as cleaning products and second-hand smoke. The chemicals in these products can interfere with children’s rapid growth and development. We want the best for our children, but we don’t always know where the dangers lie or what we can do to protect them.

Healthy Spaces is a new interactive website designed to provide the practical information parents and caregivers need to protect growing children from environmental hazards in places where they learn and play – homes, playgrounds and child care settings. The site also houses resource information, a glossary, and, for more in-depth information, links to other websites.

Click on an image to access practical information about protecting children from potential hazards in each environment.

www.cfc-efc.ca/healthy-spaces/

